Migration is a way to move from one country to another country in order to live and work. Nowadays, many people decide to immigrate to have a better life. This essay will look at some causes and effects of immigration.

Firstly, employment opportunities are the most common reason that people decide to emigrate. In other countries, there will be variety kind of jobs and as a result, people will have a lot of opportunities to find a job.

Another cause of immigration is education opportunities; it will certainly cause directly having better future for children. With a better education, children will have chances to adapt to new style of studying and it might cause children to be a creative, flexible people and they will be able of becoming independent.

As addition to these causes, immigration has also several effects on countries and immigrants. To initiate, overpopulation is the most serious effects of immigration. In addition, when the figure of immigrants increases too fast, it will probably result in not providing enough food demanding. China is one of many examples of this factor, when Vietnamese, Cambodian and Laos people move to China to find a job and lived there.
